Empowering Children Through Robotics & Artificial Intelligence Training

In an inspiring step toward building a more inclusive and technologically equipped future, a new Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) initiative has been launched under the auspices of the As-Samra Wastewater Treatment Plant (WWTP), Jordan's largest and most advanced wastewater treatment facility. This initiative, titled Empowering Children Through Robotics and Artificial Intelligence Training, seeks to introduce digital innovation to underserved communities by equipping children with essential 21st-century skills.

As-Samra WWTP, serving over 2.3 million people in Amman and Zarqa, exemplifies a successful public-private partnership between the Jordanian government, CCC, and Veolia which included the efforts of the Jordanian government, Consolidated Contractors Company (CCC) for construction, and Veolia, a global leader in water treatment operations and maintenance. Beyond addressing water scarcity and environmental issues, the plant also supports community development, including youth empowerment through education in emerging technologies.

The robotics and AI training initiative, led by CCC's CSR program and As-Samra in partnership with the Martyr Rashed Alzyoud Association, aims to equip 180 children from underserved areas with essential tech skills. Through both theoretical and hands-on learning in robotics and AI, the program seeks to inspire innovation, foster creativity, and empower a new generation of young Jordanians to become future technology leaders.

A Vision Beyond Water

This initiative underscores CCC's commitment to sustainable development, extending its impact beyond physical infrastructure into human capital. It demonstrates how corporations involved in major infrastructure projects can integrate social responsibility into their operational footprint, contributing to the holistic advancement of society.

By investing in the digital education of children from disadvantaged backgrounds, the As-Samra WWTP initiative represents a powerful convergence of environmental sustainability, educational empowerment, and technological innovation. It's not just about building better wastewater systems—it's about building a better future.

To maximize impact, CCC partnered with organizations that serve underprivileged communities, providing them with the tools to enhance learning and digital literacy. The donations were allocated as follows:
